Wall Street

NEW YORK — Stocks turned higher Thursday and regained most of the ground they lost in the previous session following a bright first-quarter outlook from semiconductor maker Advanced Micro Devices Inc. and upgrades of oil services stocks.

AMD's forecast heartened tech investors who were spooked Wednesday by disappointing earnings forecasts from Intel Corp. and Yahoo Inc. Since semiconductors form the guts of much high-tech equipment, AMD is seen as a bellwether and its outlook was enough to make investors overlook a dimmer forecast from Apple Computer Inc.

"People are happy that the Intel bad news didn't translate to other semiconductor stocks," said Robert Streed, portfolio manager of Northern Trust Select Equity Fund in Chicago.

Investors also cheered oil services company Schlumberger Ltd.'s announcement of a 2-for-1 stock split and Morgan Stanley's upgrades of oil services businesses, including Halliburton Co. and Baker Hughes Inc.

The Dow Jones industrial average added 25.85, or 0.24 percent, to 10,880.71.

Broader stock indicators also closed higher. The Standard & Poor's 500 index rose 7.11, or 0.56 percent, to 1,285.04, and the Nasdaq composite index gained 22.17, or 0.97 percent, to 2,301.81.

Bonds fell, with the yield on the 10-year Treasury note rising to 4.37 percent from 4.34 percent late Wednesday. The U.S. dollar was mixed against other major currencies in European trading. Gold prices were higher.

Crude oil futures rose to a four-month high. A barrel of light crude settled at $66.83, up $1.10, in trading on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

The earnings season is off to a nervous start, with investors reacting strongly to earnings or guidance that fall short of analysts' estimates.

"The market has been weak in the last few days on a number of worries," said Joseph Lisanti, editor of Standard & Poor's weekly newsletter The Outlook. "One of them has been earnings. We think that despite a couple of warnings and misses, earnings in general for the fourth quarter of 2005 are going to look pretty decent."

The day's economic news was mixed. Construction of new single-family homes surged to an all-time high in 2005 but construction activity fell sharply in December, sending a signal that the nation's long housing boom could be cooling off.

Advancing issues led decliners by more than 2 to 1 on the New York Stock Exchange where volume was 2.57 billion shares.

Confusion turns traffic stop to 100 mph chase

By ANNIE GOELLER
DAILY JOURNAL STAFF WRITER
agoeller@thejournalnet.com

Confusion over why police were stopping an Indianapolis man led to a chase across the northern end of Johnson County Thursday afternoon.

Robert B. Parsons, 35, thought a Greenwood officer was stopping him for two televisions that had been stolen from the Meijer in Greenwood. After the chase, the officer told him he had planned to pull him over for rolling through a stop sign, a police report said.

Parsons told police he took the two televisions from the store by placing them in a cart and rolling them through the garden center to his vehicle outside.

Minutes after Parsons left the store, just before 3 p.m., a Greenwood police officer tried to stop Parsons for the traffic violation at County Line and Stonegate roads.

He instead accelerated and headed east on County Line Road, reaching speeds of 100 mph, according to the report.

His vehicle crossed into opposite lanes of traffic several times, and he finally crashed the car into a pole when turning onto Five Points Road.

Parsons then got out of the vehicle and ran from officers, who used a Taser to stop him, according to the report.

The Indianapolis man told police he planned to sell the televisions to buy drugs.

Police searched the vehicle and found a small silver pipe used to smoke crack cocaine. Both televisions were returned to Meijer, according to the police report.

Parsons, 408 N. Moreland Ave., was arrested on a charge of theft, resisting law enforcement, criminal recklessness with a vehicle and driving while suspended. He is being held in the Johnson County Jail on $8,000 bond.

Google clashes with feds

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO

Google Inc. is rebuffing the Bush administration's demand for a peek at what millions of people have been looking up on the Internet's leading search engine, a request that underscores the potential for online databases to become tools for government surveillance.

Mountain View, Calif.-based

Google has refused to comply with a White House subpoena first issued last summer, prompting U.S. Attorney General Alberto Gonzales this week to ask a federal judge in San Jose for an order to hand over the requested records.

The government wants a list of all requests entered into Google's search engine during an unspecified single week, a breakdown that could conceivably span tens of millions of queries.

township tax, school tax, library tax and so on.

Detailed bills would give homeowners in counties that don't already have them a breakdown of every taxing unit their property tax money goes to.

Even Johnson County bills would become more detailed for 2008 taxes. Each bill would compare the current year's tax rates to the previous year's rates, so homeowners can see which taxing entities are bumping up their rates.

This information is empowering to property owners, said

Rep. Woody Burton, R-Greenwood. Florida currently uses this system.

Espich proposed giving detailed property tax bills as part of his additions to House Bill 1001, which offers a one-time tax credit to homeowners, changes the way school districts approve multimillion-dollar building projects and puts a cap on the amount of property taxes that cities and towns can collect.

Republicans pushed the bill through a House Ways and Means Committee meeting last week without any details about the bill's financial impact. Now the bill goes to the full House for a vote.

No information was available on the cost of making more detailed bills or who would pay for that cost.

Movie

But some of the films also depict violent stories, causing churches to wrestle with the idea of promoting the movies to their congregations.

Area church members said that people have to be warned about the violent elements of movies, even ones that may have a Christian message.

But they argue that the real-life stories also offer good teaching tools for talking about topics of forgiveness and the power of love.

"End of the Spear," rated PG-13 for intense sequences of violence, tells the story from the perspective of Steve Saint, the son of one of the missionaries killed by the Waodani tribe.

According to the movie's Web site, Saint returns to the tribe as an adult to learn what happened during the last minutes of his father's life, forging a new relationship with its members.

The story fits in well with part of a yearlong theme at Mount Pleasant Christian Church in Greenwood called "Life Wide Open," which examines what it means to live life passionately for Christ.

The church sold out a showing of the movie at Canary Creek Cinemas at 7 tonight. In fact, it had a waiting list for tickets for the theater's 260 seats.

The church also invited Jamie Saint to speak before the film is shown. He is the grandson of Nate Saint, the missionary pilot who made initial contact with the Waodani tribe.

The Rev. Rich Green, who works with outreach and connection ministries at the church, saw the movie with some other staff members Wednesday.

He acknowledged there were elements of violence in the movie, as tribesmen used spears to kill the missionaries and others.

But Green said that, like World War II film "Saving Private Ryan," the violence offers a teaching tool for people to talk about an event that really occurred.

"Most of the violence that people go to see is unrealistic, exaggerated, shock-effect type violence," Green said. "This is done to give emphasis to how (the Waodani) lived their lives."

Green said the film was less of an outreach tool than "Narnia" but helped Christians examine themselves and how passionate they are about their faith.

"Whether I'm in Indiana or the Ecuadorian jungle, am I willing to lay my life down for the cause of Christ and my family no matter what the end result might be?" Green said.

Andrea Fisher, who works with high school students at New Hope Church in Greenwood, said the high school youth group plans to see the film Sunday.

She said the film offers a chance to show the teens the importance of mission work through a medium that might better reach them.

She said she doesn't approve of glorified violence, but she doesn't think that this film fits into that category, as it is depicting real-life events.

More information about the movie is available on the film's Web site, www.endofthespear.com.

times she felt like she might not make it. Meeting new friends helped, she said.

Reames has bonded with one of her roommates despite a rocky start.

As an athlete, Reames arrived on campus ahead of her three roommates. One day, exhausted after practice, she was greeted by three girls and all their bags piled up in the room.

Spoiled by living in a single room, Reames didn't realize how much smaller the room would get with three more people. She yelled at the new arrivals for cramping the room.

Tension and hurt feelings faded away shortly after, and she enjoys her roommates now, although she admitted the room still can get a little too crowded.

Classes shocked Reames, too. She was not prepared for the stern approach of the chefs.

"It was so hard to adjust to the demands the chefs had," she said. Students cannot wear makeup or jewelry and must have every piece of their uniform on, ironed and clean. Otherwise, they get an F for the day, which can mean disaster when classes last only nine days.

"I've never ironed so much in my life,"
