county Judge D.D. Banta says Herriott "kept in his mind the circumstance of the naming of the county seat."

All that is known is that he suggested the name to the community's founder, George King, who had purchased the 51 acres he envisioned as county seat.

"That name is a reflection of the times," said Franklin College dean of students Ellis Hall, who is teaching a special class this month about Franklin's leadership. "He was pretty much revered by everyone."

Franklin was established as a village. It became a town in the late 1830s and a city in September 1861.

Herriott and King are both buried in Greenlawn Cemetery in Franklin. Franklin College takes its name from the city and only indirectly from the man. It was founded in 1834 as the Indiana Baptist Manual Labor Institute. It changed its name to Franklin College in 1842, the same year it became the first college in Indiana to admit women.

according to the report. Lee Vriesman, senior vice president with the Children's Bureau, could verify only that the teen was a client of the nonprofit agency but could not say what program he was in or why he was a client.

A program the bureau offers allows 16- and 17-year-olds under the care of the state to have an apartment of their own that is paid for with state funds, she said.

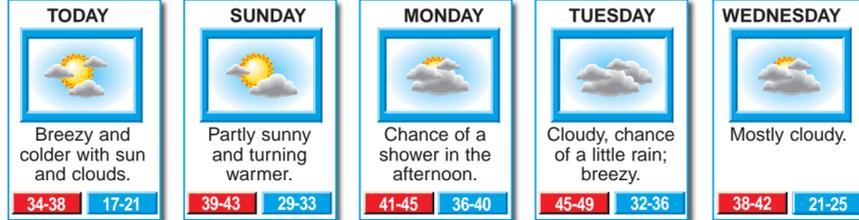

The transitional living program is intended to teach the teens life skills and how to live on their own before the state stops paying when they turn 18, she said.

Case managers and counselors check on the teens on a daily basis to be sure they have enough food and that they are going to work, she said.

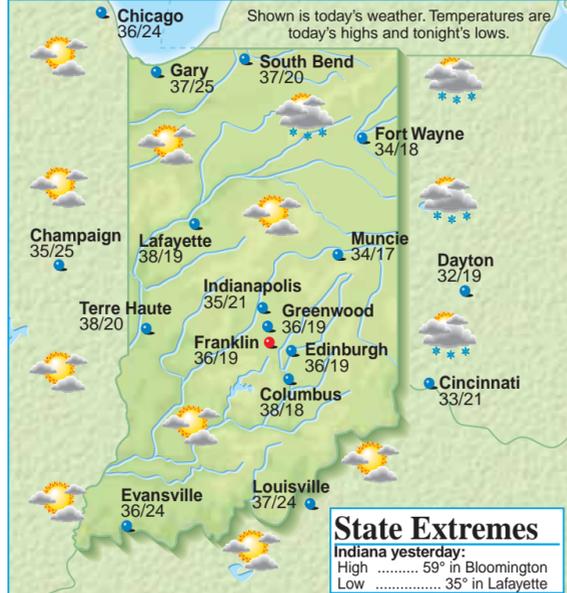

A client who was arrested while in the apartment would face charges in the juvenile court, which would then decide where the teen would go. Vriesman said she could not say whether the teen would be allowed to continue living in the apartment.

filled up minutes later, Anne Atherton, general manager said.

Nearly all of the 50 televisions and nine big screens will be playing the game. Diners can sit at the bar or fill up one of the restaurant's 58 tables, but it won't take long before people are standing around watching the game, she said.

The restaurant treats game days as any other weekend night, when business is best. So they won't be using extra staff, but plenty of food was delivered Friday afternoon, she said.

Managers at several restaurants said diners need to come at least one hour early if they want a table. Even then, they can't guarantee tables will still be open.

Diners should get to Damon's Grill on the south side of Indianapolis an hour to 1½ hours early to get a table in the restaurant. Staff is preparing for a busy Sunday with extra servers and food already ordered, manager Eric Ross said.

"We're locked and loaded," he said with a laugh.

Six plasma televisions and a 120-inch projection TV will be broadcasting the game at Just Wing'n It in Greenwood. The restaurant

TRUE-BLUE EVENTS

Canal

While downtown before Sunday's game against the Steelers, check out the canal just south of the Ohio and West streets.

On Wednesday, Mayor Bart Peterson and Indianapolis Colts Vice President Tom Zupancic dyed the water of the canal Colts blue to get the city fired up for the team's 2006 playoff run.

The mayor declared Friday "Blue Friday" in effort to get the city ready for the home game this weekend.

Tailgate party

Free tailgate party at Union Station Grand Hall on Sunday. Doors open at seats about 75 people, so get there as soon as the doors open at noon, manager Kevin Vance said.

For those who want to stay in and watch the game, the restaurant now is taking carry-out orders that can be picked up on game day, he said.

A few local restaurants said families could still have a chance to get in for the game.

Diners have a pretty good chance of getting into one of the 262 seats at T.G.I. Friday's in Greenwood, manager Gary Shelton said. Televisions throughout the restaurant will be broadcasting the game. Colts games played at home don't often pack the house, but he is still expecting more customers than those who come to watch a regular season game.

Managers at three other restaurants said they don't expect a wait on game day because their televisions are in the bar area. But diners can still come to Greenwood's Stone Creek Dining Co., Logan's Roadhouse or O'Charley's with the hope of getting a seat near the bar or being able to spot the television across the room.

For those going out without the kids, John Wayne's Pub and Eatery will offer drink specials for the game and give away prizes, manager Amber Padgett said.

The southside pub is already selling tickets for its Super Bowl party, which will be a larger version of Sunday's game. Reservations are not being accepted for Sunday's game, so Padgett suggests people get to the pub about noon when it opens Sunday, she said.

And they'll be in their regular spots when the Colts run onto the field for the playoff game against the Pittsburgh Steelers at 1 p.m. Sunday. They'll have painted faces and, as always, will be decked out in team attire.

In the Colts fan circle, they are Mr. and Mrs. Tuba. She is also known as Horse Lady, a name earned in 1999 when she became an Ultimate Colts Fan as part of a fan-oriented spin-off of the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

Outside the Colts world, Ray and Diane Bridges own a dog and cat kennel, Sleepy Hollow Pet Ranch.

The couple, who live near Stop 11 Road and Emerson Avenue, traveled to downtown Indianapolis on Friday morning in a thunderstorm and hail for a pep rally on Monument Circle.

Both wore team sweat shirts and painted their faces with horseshoes and blue-and-white letters spelling Colts. They gathered with about 25 other self-described "super fans" dressed up and carrying signs in support of the team.

"It's an awesome feeling for the city right now," Ray Bridges said. "You couldn't ask for a more exciting time to be a Colts fan."

The couple have been wearing Colts apparel every day since Dec. 1.

"We have plenty of clothes and wear our blue every day," he said. "We'll do that every day until there's not a reason to."

In the past, they've dressed the kennel dogs and cats up in Colts bandanas and attire. Their five dogs at home also sport team attire, Diane Bridges said.

They have had season tickets since moving to Indianapolis from Ohio in 1986.

About 10 years ago, Ray Bridges decided he wanted to bring some spirit to the games with the tuba he has played since the fifth grade.

Since stadium workers knew Bridges, he was allowed to bring the tuba into the stadium. Normally, horns and other noisemakers are not allowed in the RCA Dome.

"That was when we were 1-15 on the season, and no one was in the stands," the 44-year-old said. "It's become a fixture from there."

On Friday, Bridges demonstrated how he plays the tune "Charge" at key points during the game, shouting to fans, "You know what to do."

Since getting season tickets, the Bridgeses have traveled to 16 pro football stadiums across the country and nine playoff games, they said. Sunday will be the fourth home playoff game they've attended.

The routine will remain the same as at regular season home games, Ray Bridges said.

They arrive at the dome about three hours before start time but do not tailgate. Instead, they go to the south entrance to greet and talk with players and wish them luck.

"Hopefully, we're good luck charms," Ray Bridges said.
