'Dear Abby' by Pauline Phillips and Jeanne Phillips

Teen might have done more than odd jobs for woman

DEAR ABBY: I think my grandson lives next door to me, but I'm not sure. I can't sleep at night wondering and worrying. About two years ago, my neighbor kept inviting my then-18-year-old son over to help her do odd jobs while her husband was at work...

I work with this man's ex-wife, and she confided to me once that she never had children because he couldn't give her any. To me, this could mean that the husband knows he's not the father, or maybe that they used my son as an unintentional sperm donor...

DEAR SUSPICIOUS: I don't know if confronting your son on the subject would be warmly received, but you are certainly entitled to discuss your concerns with him and find out if they are well-founded. Whatever happens or doesn't happen after that is up to your son...

DEAR ABBY: My 12-year-old daughter was invited to a classmate's birthday party today. When I asked for the details of the party, she told me it was a slumber party. Here's the kicker: The classmate in question is a boy...

As my shock dissipates, I'm suddenly reminded that the times sure are a-changin', and that even younger parents like me need to brace themselves. (I am 32.) I don't consider myself oblivious, but boy, do I suddenly feel that way...

By that, I mean that every family has different standards, and it's up to the parents to enforce them.
