Man's best friends compete in New York

ho needs "American Idol" when you can watch " when you can watch the 131st Westminster Kennel Club Dog Show (8 p.m., USA, concluding Tuesday), the secondlongest-running continually conducted sporting event in the United States.

Only the Kentucky Derby has a longer tradition. When the Westminster began in 1877, Rutherford B. Hayes was president, the automobile was still decades into the future and most Americans considered a dog to be a hunting companion or help around the farm. The notion of a purebred dog as a mere pet was out of reach for most Americans.

Tonight, more than 2,600 dogs will make their way to New York's Madison Square Garden to represent 165 recognized breeds.

Lester Holt ("Weekend Today") returns as host, joined by expert David Frei, who presides over his 18th consecutive Westminster. They will be joined by Debbye Turner ("The Early Show"), a veterinarian and Miss America

• "American Experience" (9 p.m., WTIU) takes an informed and affectionate look at the city of New Orleans and its unique place in American history and culture.

Using period art, photographs and interviews with poets, artists and historians, the piece puts great emphasis on the city's unique public culture, its French heritage, its penchant for parades and a long history of racial and ethnic cross-cultural pollination that put it at odds with American culture.

As one native resident recalls, tourists were still called "Americans" when he was a boy.

Much like a history class that simply runs out of time, "New Orleans" covers the past 40 years of the city's history in a hurry. And it offers little discussion of the city's reputation for crime and violence, a problem that long preceded the Katrina catastrophe and now seems to be hindering its recovery.
Last week, CNN correspondent

Anderson Cooper hosted a special on New Orleans. It was called "Murder City USA."

• Joely Richardson ("Nip/ Tuck") and Stephen Campbell Moore ("The History Boys") star as Wallis Simpson and King Edward VIII in the TV movie "Wallis & Edward" (9 p.m., BBC America), the true tale of a monarch who relinquished his crown for the woman he loved.

Farrow helps give aid in African country

Shaking hands with droves of cheering street children, Mia Farrow began a weeklong tour of the Central African Republic on Saturday to draw attention and aid to one of the world's forgotten crises. The 62-year-

FARROW old actress and U.N. goodwill ambassador will visit some of the 150,000 people displaced by the nation's simmering conflict and tour northern towns recently ravaged by fighting close to the borders with Chad and Sudan's troubled Darfur region.

"It's called a forgotten crisis, a forgotten humanitarian crisis, but forgotten implies that it was once remembered," Farrow said in an interview in the country's capital of dirt roads and tumbledown, tin-roofed buildings. "I'm not sure it was in anyone's consciousness ... it's undetected."

More than a year of instability in the impoverished nation's northeast boiled over into a rebellion in October in which insurgents captured several towns. French-backed government troops recaptured the towns in early December, but they have been accused of burning villages to flush out insurgents.

A separate rebel group also has launched attacks in the northwest.

The United Nations says the violence has affected 1 million people, nearly one-quarter of the country's population, and that tens of thousands of women have been raped by different factions.

Asked how he felt about revisiting his creative past, Lagerfeld replied that "in a sense, it's something that's got nothing to do with me, almost.'

"I don't make comparisons especially, I don't compare myself with myself," he said. "Today is today and yesterday is yesterday."

Lagerfeld said "there's nothing worse than being too pleased with yourself."
