The judge entered an initial plea of not guilty and assigned a public defender as Bryant's attorney. A trial has been slated for April 10.

Bryant had recently been staying with Morgan but was mostly transient and homeless, a family member told police.

Morgan was discovered dead, bloody and beaten, in the garage of her Greenwood home Dec. 24.

Bryant was found hours later at an Indianapolis bus station with human blood on her clothes, authorities said.

Bryant's sister, Frances Sims, told police that her sister had grown increasingly angry over Morgan's refusal to give her money.

Morgan had told her daughter she would need to find a new place to live after the beginning of the year, family members said.

A family spokesman said that Morgan had wanted Bryant to get help for mental illness.

Police were called to the house at 1 E. Main St. when neighbors and family could not reach Morgan by phone. Officers found blood and shoes outside the home, which led them to the garage.

talk about the war, he often praised his former roommate.

"He would say that Jerry Ford was the best-liked officer on the ship," B.J. Deppe said.

Ford and Fritz Deppe kept in touch, sending occasional Christmas cards and letters, B.J. Deppe said.

"He was a gentleman," B.J. Deppe said of Ford.

In a letter dated Nov. 14, 1974, Ford thanked Fritz Deppe for his letter of support following his vice presidential nomination.

During a speech at a Monterey reunion in 1975, Ford spoke directly of Deppe: "Fritz Deppe and I had a little stateroom. You would hardly call it one of any fancy accommodations, would you, Fritz? I've forgotten who had the upper and who had the lower bunk."

A transcript from American president.org said Ford paused for laughter and continued: "You know, those M.D.'s are always smarter than us politicians."

In another letter, dated Oct. 3, 1975, Ford again thanked Fritz Deppe for his support as he took over the presidency.

"While I did not seek this great responsibility, I will not shirk it," Ford wrote in the letter.

pajamas, and it appeared as if Lorrein Goodman was sleeping when she was shot, Lutz said.

The time frame for the deaths was determined based on the condition and temperature of the bodies and when the deceased was last seen or heard from, Lutz said.

Gary Goodman had overdosed on prescription medication at the time of his death, but Lutz would not say what type of drug or if Gary Goodman had a prescription for the medication.

Police will investigate who owned the gun, Lutz said. Gary Goodman did have a permit to carry a gun, Lutz said.

Several phone messages left for Greenwood Police Chief Joe Pitcher on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday were not returned.

Greenwood Detective Doug Roller said he is investigating the deaths but that Pitcher must answer questions about the case.

Lorrein and Gary Goodman were married in 2001 and were in the process of divorcing. The couple had no children together, according to court documents relating to the divorce proceedings.

They had separated in 2006, and each sought a protective order against the other. They later reconciled but separated again in early December, according to the divorce filing.

Gary Goodman lived at 1663 Southwood St. in a mobile home park near U.S. 31 and Stop 18 Road.

It is unclear if Lorrein Goodman was staying in the home when she died.

the highest rate in the county with 87.5 percent and was ranked 68th in the state.

Whiteland Community High School was ranked 89th out of more than 360 public high schools in Indiana.

Edinburgh Community High School's rates were less than a percentage point below the state average of 76.5 percent in the study. Rates for the rest of the county high schools were at or above the state average.

New Harmony and Medora were the only two Indiana high schools to graduate all eligible students in four years.

"Now the challenge is for local communities to place the same degree of attention on ensuring not only that all students graduate, but that they receive the essential foundation Indiana's high school diploma represents,"

BY THE NUMBERS

Here's a look at graduation rates for the county's six public high schools, according to Indiana Department of Education:

| School | Rate | Rank |
|--------------|--------------|------|
| Center Grove | 87.5 percent | 68 |
| Edinburgh | 75.9 percent | 249 |
| Franklin | 76.5 percent | 239 |
| Greenwood | 81.2 percent | 177 |
| Indian Creek | 84 percent | 125 |
| Whiteland | 85.9 percent | 89 |

Indiana Superintendent of Public Instruction Suellen Reed said in a news release.

Superintendents at Nineveh-Hensley-Jackson and Clark-Pleasant school districts said they were not surprised by the numbers and were happy with the results announced Tuesday.

"At any point in time, someone in our school district is not completing school, and we are not happy about that. But sometimes circumstances are out of the school's control. Given the fact of the rapid growth of our school

Nebraska native adopted as his hometown and represented in Congress for a quarter century, Ford's presidential museum opened its doors for a brief service and then an 18-hour public viewing, stretching overnight, before his burial this afternoon.

Jimmy Carter, the Democrat who defeated Ford in 1976 and became his friend, not only attended the Washington service with the two other living ex-presidents, the elder Bush and Bill Clinton, but came to Grand Rapids on the plane with Ford's family.

Michigan Gov. Jennifer Granholm, delivering one of the most emotional tributes of the day, spoke as if addressing Ford directly, in remarks at the museum.

"You were an incredible human being," said Granholm, a Democrat. "You were a paradoxical gift of remarkable intellect and achievement wrapped in a plain brown wrapper."

Under towering arches of the cathedral in the morning, Henry Kissinger, Ford's secretary of state, paid tribute to his leadership in achieving nuclear arms control with the Soviets, pushing for the first political agreement between Israel and Egypt and helping to bring majority rule to southern Africa.

"In his understated way he did his duty as a leader, not as a performer playing to the gallery," Kised the funeral for former President Ronald Reagan in 2004.

Tuesday morning, once Secret Service decided the building passed inspection, the staff entered the cathedral and opened the gates at 8 a.m.

Nearly 4,000 people attended the service, and each had a special pass so they could come in to the funeral. Most also had to be in the cathedral two hours before the service.

Every detail about the funeral was planned: Who sits where, how each person gets to that seat, who escorts high-profile guests and family members, and how those people leave after the service.

Every former president, the current president and first lady, Supreme Court justices and Cabinet members were to attend the funeral, she said.

"We have the entire government here," she said.

"It's a lot of juggling to get everyone in on time."

To avoid traffic jams, 30 motorcades were scheduled to arrive in 10-minute increments.

"People who are not intimately involved with it really do not have a feel of the complexity of it," she said.

If something were to happen to cause a delay, it would be like a domino effect, making everyone late to the funeral, she said.

Cooper met with White House officials and Secret Service on Monday to plan the president's every move. She said security focused on Bush: When he was to arrive at the cathedral, how he would get to his seat, when he path to the future rather than just a hurdle to get through in life," he said.

At Nineveh-Hensley-Jackson, Indian Creek High School administrators currently follow up on students who drop out with phone calls and letters to ask them why they chose to drop out.

Some move to other districts or decide to attend a charter or home school, Superintendent John Reed said.

He said he is proud of the graduation rate, but the high school staff is working to improve it.

Indian Creek started an adviser-advisee program this year where teachers work individually with students to plan their post-secondary goals, he said.

At Edinburgh Community High School, the rate was calculated at 75.9 percent, just below the state average.

"That is not good enough," Superintendent Rebecca Sager said.

The high school staff continually looks for ways to keep students from dropping out, she said.

"Some of our students have such challenges in their lives; and as an educational institution, we have a hard time compensating for those challenges," she said.

At Greenwood Community High School, where the graduation rate was 81.2 percent, the staff has started two efforts this year to keep more students in school.

But administrators won't start seeing the impact on the graduation rate for several years.

Freshmen are targeted for the program, which is in its pilot stage. Students who are at risk for dropping out spend time in smaller group settings each day working on homework with a teacher.

The other program is used for credit recovery for older students who just need help catching up on a few classes to get their diploma.

Factors that had not been used before to figure an official graduation count for schools, such as students who decided over the summer not to return to school, are included in the new state formula.

would speak with Betty Ford and how he would leave.

With so many high-profile attendees and national attention surrounding the services, Cooper said it was important to remember that the funeral was for the family. A perimeter spanning two blocks from the cathedral was blocked off, she said. No cars were allowed access to the cathedral without previous approval.

Unless they were handicapped, most attendees were dropped off outside the perimeter and walked to the building, she said.

When the service started, Cooper planned to find an empty seat and watch it.

Once it starts, there's nothing left to do, she said. If something's not done then, it's not going to happen.

glitch in the seating chart.

Early Tuesday, Cooper worked with two Secret Service teams searching the cathedral for security purposes.

"We sweep the entire cathedral, top to bottom," she said.

Agents look under every chair and in every nook, opening doors, closets and gates, she said.

On Tuesday, she wore a microphone hidden in her clothing so she could talk to Secret Service agents.

She said her sister Dorothy Henderson, who still lives in Johnson County, thought the hidden microphone was pretty cool.

Cooper grew up in Johnson County and is a 1965 graduate of Clark Township High School. She started working at the National Cathedral in 1986 and coordinatsinger said. "Gerald Ford had the virtues of small-town America."

Another eulogist, NBC newsman Tom Brokaw, said Ford brought to office "no demons, no hidden agenda, no hit list or acts of vengeance," an oblique reference to the air of subterfuge that surrounded Nixon in his final days.

In his homily, Episcopalian minister Robert G. Certain touched on the fractious debate in the church over homosexual relationships and said Ford did not think the issue should be splitting Episcopalians. He was Ford's pastor at St. Margaret's Church in Palm Desert, Calif.
