NEW YORK — Wall Street eked out a modest advance Tuesday after investors found little motivation in remarks by Federal Reserve officials and also shrugged off a warning from chip maker National Semiconductor Inc.

When police searched Hunter's home in October, officers initially found more than 5,000 files of pornographic images involving infants and children on his computer. One investigator described the images at the time as the most deplorable, disgusting, reprehensible child pornography he had ever seen. Many of the images were downloaded from the Internet, police said.

The federal indictment accuses Hunter of distributing three images of child pornography on June 8 and possessing more than 80 images on Oct. 26, the day of the police search, according to a news release from the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Southern District of Indiana.

The man told police he was sexually excited by children and that his urges were wrong and painful, according to a Greenwood police report. Hunter faces a maximum sentence of 25 years in prison and a $250,000 fine for the federal charges, assistant U.S. attorney Gayle L. Helart said in a news release.

spring, and now I think I drug my feet too long," said Norma Lingerfelder, a Shelby County farmer. "Now maybe I need a lawyer."

The meeting focused on informing farmers of their rights, though some critics had their say. Rockies Express Pipeline LLC representatives and a utility attorney made presentations about the $4.4 billion project and fielded questions.

The federal government likely will approve the 1,623-mile pipeline within a year, environmental project manager Jim Thompson said.

The pipeline company may make offers on access to property at any time.

The 42-inch-diameter pipeline would bring natural gas from Colorado to Ohio. It would cut through Union, Franklin, Nineveh

PIPELINE AGREEMENT

Under an agreement with the Indiana Farm Bureau, Rockies Express Pipeline LLC must:

- Separate top soil from subsoil when ditch is filled back in.
 - Bury the pipeline at least 3 feet underground and 1 foot beneath underground drain tiles.
 - Assume responsibility for all damaged tiles.
 - Return land to its original contours and correct compaction and rutting.
 - Pay for any fertilization needed after construction.
 - Work to prevent erosion and restore any erosion from construction.
 - Pay fair market value for timber, which can also be resold if removed before construction.
 - Assume financial responsibility for all damages to property.

Accidents reported

The driver of a work van slid into a pond in the Homecoming housing subdivision in Greenwood after braking on the ice.

The name of the driver who stopped at the intersection of Sentiment Lane and Harmony Way was not available Tuesday afternoon.

No one was injured when the van he was driving slid down the embankment and onto the frozen trees. Pending federal approval, construction will begin in the spring of 2008. Natural gas would flow through the pipeline as early as December 2008 if the project stays on schedule.

Landowners wanted to know whether the company would address property damage claims and other concerns in a timely fashion.

The federal government oversees the construction, which concerns many affected landowners, who doubt their concerns will be addressed.

"We don't like that no one but the feds is monitoring this," said Dan Parker, a Morgan County farmer. "I don't see Washington, D.C., hurrying to get on its knees for me."

"There are 4.4 billion reasons why this is going to happen," said Christopher Earle, an attorney hired by the farm bureau to inform farmers of their rights.

"But there are also 4.4 billion reasons why they have every incentive to do this promptly and properly."

Landowners hold negotiating leverage, he said, because investment bankers backing the company need assurance the pipeline can be built with few complications.

Earle, a former lobbyist and seasoned utilities attorney, urged landowners to drive a hard bargain and get it all on paper.

Hoosier landowners now have a foundation on which to base negotiations.

The farm bureau has negotiated an agreement with Rockies Express to ensure the company takes responsibility for damage during construction and restores soil in the work area to a condition suitable for planting crops.

The agreement sets standards for replacement of topsoil, repair of damaged drainage tiles and erosion control.

Affected farmers are assured that construction crews will lay enough uncorrupted topsoil over their work area after filling in the trench.

Under the agreement, the pipe will laid 3 feet deep and deeper if the trench runs into drainage tile. The pipeline company would also have to pay landowners for future damages and compensation for the loss of timber, which farmers can also sell before workers arrive.

The farm bureau cannot enforce the agreement, which concerned many at the meeting.

The agreement merely serves as a starting point for land negotiations, bureau attorney Justin Schneider said.

The bureau lacks the legal authority to enforce the agreement, he said.

Pipeline opponents said they pin their hopes on two bills scheduled to appear before committees this week in the Indiana General Assembly.

Sen. Robert Jackman, R-Milroy, introduced bills that would allow the state department of agriculture to oversee pipeline construction and require the company make offers on land before seeking eminent domain.

Neither bill would cancel or reroute the pipeline.

they are in a hurry to get home to their kids," Cox said.

Slowing down is key

Drivers need to slow down and remember that a layer of ice may lie under the snow, Cox said.

"The object is to get home safely, not quickly," Cox said.

Tuesday afternoon, traffic was slow on U.S. 31 headed south toward Edinburgh, he said.

Although some drivers were frustrated, the slow traffic meant people were acting more safely, he said.

Traffic was slow in downtown Greenwood and on U.S. 31 in the city.

But drivers need to be patient and keep in mind that traffic is going to be slow and steady in snowy conditions, Greenwood Police Chief Joe Pitcher said.

Only one slide-off and no personal injury accidents were reported before 4 p.m. Tuesday. "This is God's will and we just can't change it," he said of traffic. An accident in the northbound lane of Interstate 65 at the Seymour exit stopped traffic in the afternoon.

Keeping roads clear

In Greenwood, every snow truck was out plowing the main thoroughfares before rush hour traffic started Tuesday.

Although some salt had been put down as the snow began to fall, not much pre-treatment was used, said Norm Gabehart, director of operations.

"You can't stop that much snow," he said.

Workers concentrated on keeping main roads clear until nightfall, when they would begin plowing side streets.

He expected to have the city streets completely plowed by this morning.

All Franklin trucks were out plowing streets as soon as the snow started falling, a city street employee said.

All of them piled in the small truck and headed down the street to where Kyle and Jodi DeBoor live.

The men dropped off their wives and children and headed back to the home while they called 911 on a cell phone.

"By the time we came back, the house was totally in flames and 50 percent of it was gone," Kyle DeBoor said.

The fire destroyed the home, a car in the garage and the truck that was parked in the driveway close to the home.

Flames also damaged a home just south of the DeBoor's house.

Firefighters did not immediately know the reason for the fire Tuesday night, Franklin Fire Department spokesman Eddie Daugherty said.

For now, the family will stay with Kyle DeBoor, members of the family said.

Fire

When he approached the entry-way to his garage, he saw that paint around the door was peeling.

Craig DeBoor cracked the door open and felt the heat from the fire.

"It was like a furnace," he said. He rushed back to the family room and instructed the family to leave.

"Get out of the house. It's a fire," he yelled to his family.

They scooped up the children: Craig and Emily DeBoor's daughter, Josee, 1; his niece 3-year-old Kinlee, and nephew Kyler, 1.
