Those extra inches around your waist can be as life threatening as stage II cancer.

While any excessive weight gain is dangerous to your health, weight around the middle concerns doctors the most. In fact, if you're a woman with a 37" waist or a man with a 40" waist, the risk to your health may be equal to someone with stage II cancer. Other serious weight-related problems include diabetes, heart disease, osteoarthritis, asthma and infertility. Fortunately, though, there is something you can do about it. Our Bariatric Care Center provides weight management treatments that range from noninvasive, self-directed programs to surgical options.
